Mission

To advocate on behalf of women of color through national and local actions and strategic alliances that promote leadership development and gender equity in areas of health, education and economic empowerment.

The History of the Coalition

Concerned with various problems affecting themselves, their families and community, a small group of African American women in New York City joined together in an effort to address these issues. They continued to reach out to other black women in the area and created a dynamic influential force. In 1971, their efforts lead to the organization of “The Coalition of 100 Black Women”.

Role model projects and vital community involvement captured the attention of both local and national news media. As the organization continued to gain recognition, black women throughout the country sought to duplicate the programs of the Coalition in their own areas. As a result, the decision was made to expand the organization and create a national organization and in October of 1981, The National Coalition of 100 Black Women was established.

To date, the national organization has 59 chapters representing 28 states. In profile, the typical Coalition woman has completed college, holds a professional position, and is integrally involved in the socioeconomic and political matrix of her respective community.

Mission/Vision

Improve the lives of African American women and their families by advocating for programs focusing on family, education, health and finances. Empower women of color by offering them the tools necessary to succeed.

Our History

In 2007 a diverse group of dynamic women residing in the Charlotte area began meeting and tenaciously working toward the goal of joining the ranks of the esteemed women of “The National Coalition of 100 Black Women”. Many months of hard work and patience culminated in an elegant installation ceremony for forty enthusiastic, service-driven women on September 20, 2009. The Chapter became a 501(c)(3) not-for-profit organization in 2011. Through advocacy, partnerships and other networks the chapter is fulfilling its’ mission and continues to promote leadership, service and sisterhood as the foundation for ongoing success of the organization.
